* Adobe Photoshop Elements: The Photoshop Elements version, available for Windows, Macintosh, and Linux, is a great low-cost program that brings even novice users a lot of the basics necessary to edit any kind of digital image. This is a great way to get started and if, like millions of others, you have a simple photo collection that you want to make a little bit more attractive. * Photoshop Lightroom: This fully integrated editing and photo management program from Adobe offers both novice and expert users the power and flexibility needed to edit, manage, and share all kinds of digital images. There are many other competing programs (Photodraw, Paint Shop Pro, PhotoScape, and GIMP being just a few), but most people will find that Adobe Photoshop is the most popular and easiest to use. # Using Photoshop Elements: Building a Simple Image The following steps show you how to create and edit a simple, 8-bit grayscale (black and white) image in Photoshop Elements (Figure 1-1). FIGURE 1-1: The left image shows the original image, and the right image shows the results of the steps in this book. So, open a new file and choose File⇒Open to load a new image. In the image window, move the scroll bar to the right so that the window's height is about 50 percent, and then click OK. You see an image you can start to work with; however, this image will only be 8 bits/pixel, making it very simple. You can see that the black color is actually made of a number of grays, and you can make this effect happen in Photoshop Elements as well. This brings up the following menu (see Figure 1-2): FIGURE 1-2: This menu in the editor lets you use the Remove Color option to turn off colors in your photo. To change colors in this image to the grayscale colors, click the Remove Color button. By default, Remove Color blacks out the colors (as if you had changed the white color to black), but you can create other colors as well. Click the small gray circle with a white square and the words Colorize to turn on and adjust the color. Click and hold the small gray circle with a white square and the word Hue to select a color. With a color selected, click and hold the small gray circle with a white square

World Heritage Sites - The Biodiversity Hotspots The world we live in is an amazing one, filled with wonders and discoveries on every level. Each of us has a role to play in preserving these wonders for future generations, and we are all strongly motivated to play our part. Every day, you'll find people involved in the protection of the earth and its environment. They are our scientists, our teachers, our business leaders, our policy makers, our business partners, our brothers and sisters, our friends and neighbors. The long-term decisions we make as citizens are an important part of the mix. Decisions such as where we invest our time and energy, where we buy our groceries and household products, where we shop, where we live, where we play, where we learn. Sometimes decisions are made with an eye toward the future, and at other times they are made today, but they always have a future impact, and a long-term impact in particular. Let's take a look at where those impacts are. We'll start by considering the protection and preservation of our environment as the key to ensuring this future. Then we will consider some of the natural and man-made wonders of this world that have the potential to sustain the human story, and which, when properly preserved, ensure its future. Preservation is one of the three pillars of World Heritage, and this pillar is inextricably intertwined with the other two. National Significance On UNESCO's web site, it states that any monument or site can be inscribed on the World Heritage List if it possesses A fully representative concentration of cultural or natural heritage at any historical period or has special aesthetic, technological or scientific value; The characteristics of the outstanding natural and/or cultural heritage place it out of harm's way; The outstanding natural or cultural heritage is of world significance, either individually or in association with other sites, as evidence of cultural and/or natural history which is consistent with the theme of the particular property, and furthers understanding of the past or present human environment. It then goes on to explain that The Commission's purpose is to identify and recognize significant places, landscapes and natural and cultural phenomena, which contain within themselves the unique and irreplaceable cultural and natural values of the world heritage. Here are a few more details to consider when identifying world heritage sites:

Eerie mum who died days after losing three babies tells of horrors she saw at hospital By Daniel Tarade BBC News, Lagos The troubled life of Ebere Moronke didn't end with the birth of her first child in 2008. Her live in-laws have been shunned by family members, she has lost three babies and she has been told she will not be able to have more children. But this pregnancy is different. It's her husband's first wife's thirtieth birthday. For the past few months, Mrs Moronke, 36, has been going to the clinic almost every day. And she can hardly stand the waiting. She has three babies in her womb: she hopes they will be born healthy and stay with her. After the births she doesn't go back to the clinic, but she doesn't want to lose the chance of giving birth there. The family already hates her, and it does so because of her pregnancy. Of the 17 million Nigerian women who get pregnant each year, some will struggle to get the medical care they need, usually in a public facility. But the free maternity care available at public hospitals is a myth. A study released in February by the World Bank in collaboration with the Child Health Epidemiology Reference Group (CHERG) found that there were often problems with doctors and patient counselling. Any pregnant woman, whatever her age, is entitled to the same services Journal Editors "Government policies for obstetric care are promoting myths and gross underprovision of essential services," they said. A couple of months ago, there were three babies in her uterus. Mrs Moronke was not told about her other two pregnancies, she just felt pain. "I wasn't working, so I thought it was just stomach pain, but when the period came, I learnt that I was pregnant again," she says. "And when I realised that I was pregnant again, I was very scared. I had bad thoughts, bad thoughts. I was so scared I couldn't think at all. "I went to the clinic about three times before the birth, and the doctors told me I had already delivered two babies. But at the time I was delivering my third child, I went to the clinic and they told me I was not pregnant. They said I couldn't get pregnant any more. It's true. I cannot have any more babies. "I didn't know what to do. I tried to keep it to myself because I had never told anyone about it. I
